Dias Pardakov in Nijmegen

Dutch people have a very different idea of the country. The association with Sacha Baron Cohen's alter ego Borat is a hard one to shake: for most Dutch people, their knowledge of this former Soviet country is limited to what is portrayed in the movie.

'It's just a joke,' says Dias Pardakov, shrugging his shoulders.

Pardakov is a PhD candidate at Al-Farabi University in Almaty, the biggest city in Kazakhstan, but currently also holds a position in Nijmegen. He has been here for three months, studying under his second supervisor and religious studies expert Carl Sterkens.
