

The role of labor migration in the formation of the labor market

The problem of the formation of the labor market is largely associated with the recent political and socio-economic situation in Kazakhstan, gave birth to an abnormal surge in migration, the breakdown of traditional economic ties, their movement towards the creation of new markets and new economic space.

The state of the labor market affected by the problems caused by inconsistent and contradictory nature of the transformations, slow formation of new mechanisms of regulation and self-regulation of the economy, uncontrollable element release processes, redistribution and employment of workers, the imposition of the deepest crisis in the economy trends haphazard transformation of society.

The process of forming kazastanskogo labor market has a distinct regional identity. The huge size of the country, clearly manifested territorial differentiation of unemployment, the growth in the regions of the official and hidden unemployment working population, an increase in the scale of illegal employment and mobility convert the solution of problems of regional labor market policy in the acute and pressing problems.