The aim of this work is to study the factors that determine the socio-psychological adaptation of the company's personnel.

The importance of professional oriented activities and adaptation of workers is not deep perceived in our country for a long period.

Now, many state-owned enterprises and commercial organizations don't have the basic adaptation programs. At the same time, there is a large international experience of using adaptive techniques, which domestic companies began to adopt only recently.

The results of empirical studies have been obtained by applying the following techniques: test of communicative abilities Michelson
