Task 1. Ask students to look at the expression Study helpline and the photo strip. Elicit a definition of helpline (a telephone line, email or Internet forum where people can access information and support). Ask students to provide examples of helplines they know. Elicit what they think the unit is going to be about (information about going to university and guidelines on studying).

Task 2. Speaking: Divide the class into pairs to look at the subjects in the box and say how many they know. Encourage students to look up any words they are not sure about in their dictionaries, or they can look up the words in the Macmillan Online Dictionary.

(If time: use the Extra Activity, TB, page 29).

Task 3. In pairs, students think of other university subjects. Encourage students to race against each other by setting a three-minute time limit. Ask the pair with the longest list to write their answers on the board. Remind students that we write language subjects with a capital letter.

Task 4. In pairs, students discuss which subjects in exercises 1a and 1b interest them and say why. Elicit feedback in open class.
