monograph / S.M. Imankulova. – Almaty: Kazakh university, 2020. – 156 pages.

ISBN 978-601-04-4435-5

The monograph contains the N.I. Ilminski, M.A. Terentyev, P.M. Melioranski's works. Works of turkologists, such as V.V. Katarinskiy, will be reviewed and works based on modern grammar of Kazakh language will be analyzed.

Separate views of researchers on the Kazakh morphology, orientation and position of the researchers, their impact on the works of subsequent scholars, help to determine the extent to which science is developing.

The research is intended for language history researchers, comparative, descriptive, historical grammars, and fundamental morphology research on morphology.

PREFACE

As science constantly developing even the branch of the science that has been founded and developed has its disputable points and different opinions. Morphology has the same issues as well. Especially, who developed Kazakh linguistics morphology, did the initial research have scientific content, how Russian turkologists grouped parts of speech, what principles did they use, these kind of questions still don't have systematic answer in the science. Morphological issues haven't been considered in Russian Turkologists works.

What was I. Ilminski, M.A. Terentev, P.M. Melioranski, V.V. Katrinski's contribution into Kazakh linguistics development, especially to morphology, what linguistic school directions did they support, all these issues hadn't lost their significance. Researchers opinion on Kazakh morphology, their directions and positions, and its influence on the latest research helped to define the level of the science development.

Etimology had been considered as a part of the grammar and its aim has been investigation of phonetics and morphology rules till the end of the XIX century. Morphology had been considered as an «etimology» in authors works phonetics and morphology. Researchers systemised Kazakh language morphology, in dividing words into parts of speech they used Russian language system: declinable and conjugatable, nominative and verbal. All changeable words – nominals and verbals, unchangeables – particles (postpositions in Kazakh). Particles were considered as non-declinable parts of speech, and adverbs, postpositions, interjections as well.

Grammatical affixes were given as «pristavka», «okonchanie», «poslelog», «chastitsa», they were differentiated in the research
