Kazakh National University, Journalism, PR, students, education.

Journalism is not an exact science, it is creative individual index. In mathematics, physics, chemistry, for example, at least a decade long laid down bases steadfast in this time interval. But journalism is required every minute self-identification and correction of their opinions. In other words, we are all affected by biased media. The faculty of journalism in Al-Farabi University is the oldest in the country. It employs well-known scholars and practitioners, recognized journalists in the country and abroad. The training process involves students from more than 15 countries and 50 professors from the world's leading journalism schools. Journalism students are working on the most modern equipment.

The primary task of the Faculty of Journalism is to train highly qualified journalists to work in local, national and international media organizations. Faculty of Journalism continues a long tradition of providing students with all the necessary knowledge and skills that will help them succeed in the profession of journalism.

The University is rich in talented students coming from different parts of Kazakhstan, as well as from abroad. Many of them are professional journalists and authors. Moreover, graduates of the Faculty of Journalism in leadership positions in many media companies in Kazakhstan.
